TURKISH FLOUR

Wheat flour from Turkey...

Wheat is one of the oldest plants that human beings started to cultivate. Archaeological excavations showed that ancient people living around Şanlıurfa, a province in the Southeastern part of Turkey, planted Einkorn wheat (Triticum boeoticum), which is the wild form of today's commercial wheat. The archaeological findings also have shown that Eastern Mediterranean regions surrounding the rivers Tigris and Euphrates were the first places where the wheat was processed.

Production

From being the homeland of first cultivating activity and processing experience of wheat, today Turkey reached the point of becoming one of the biggest wheat flour exporter countries in the world. As wheat flour sector has an important place in the food and beverage industry, Turkish exporters are conscious about the health, environmental considerations of customers and satisfying these customer needs by offering products which comply with both legislative and market requirements. Instruments such as ISO 9001, ISO 22000 and HACCP are positive arguments for quality and food safety. Turkish exporters have been successfully following these developments which dominates world trade. Therefore, Turkey's high quality wheat flour is well-known and highly demanded. As a result, Turkey exports wheat flour to about 100 countries all over the world. Iraq, Indonesia, Philippines, Sudan, Libya, Thailand, Angola, South Korea and Middle East Countries are the major destinations for Turkey's wheat flour export.

Organic Flour Production in Turkey

Furthermore, as a result of global demand of Turkish organic flour, production increased from year to year. Since Turkey has adopted all the relevant legislation for organic agriculture accordance with EC 2091/92 and producer firms got certified according to JAS Organic international demand to mentioned product increases globally. The majority of exports are directed to the European Union Countries. Germany, France, The Netherlands, The UK, Italy and Denmark are the major export markets of Turkey. The USA, Switzerland, Sweden, Belgium, Australia, Canada, Japan, Israel, South Korea, Taiwan and El Salvador are other promising export markets.

TURKISH PASTA

The Most Favourite Food Product Around The World

Pasta is very nutritive food product prepared by kneading, shaping and drying a mixture of semolina produced from “hard” durum wheat, water and other richening components. Today pasta is one of the most popular and commonly consumed food in the world having the properties of being nutritive, cheap, easy to prepare and having a long shelf life...

History of Turkish Pasta

Turkish pasta had commonly been produced under the name of “homemade vermicelli” until the first industrial pasta production plant was established in 1922 in Bayraklı in İzmir. Since then Turkey’s total pasta production capacity has increased rapidly. There is no doubt that a continuously developing domestic and foreign demand of the sector has allowed the industry to increase production in volume and also using high technology standards enabled Turkish pasta to compete favourably in international markets.

Turkey : Best homeland of the best pasta quality...

According to the pasta production regulations in Turkey, pasta is produced only with semolina from one hundred percent durum wheat (triticum durum) without exception. Due to the fact that Turkish producers are using carefully selected durum wheat in the production, the product quality became worldwide recognized and Turkey occurred to be one of the most important pasta producers in the world.

The present production facilities of the pasta producer companies equipped with modern high-temperature lines are located mainly in Southeastern, Central and Western Anatolia, which are the major durum wheat producing regions in Turkey. The major export markets of Turkey have undergone remarkable changes particularly during the last ten years and export level increased dramatically. Therefore, Turkey exports pasta products to around 130 countries throughout the world today.

EDIBLE OILS AND FATS

Vegetable Oils From Turkey

Because of its vast agricultural potential, oilseeds and oleaginous fruits have always been important products of Turkish agriculture. Owing to modern refinery plants equipped with modern bottling lines, the edible oil sector has become one of the most progressive agro-industrial sectors in the Turkish food industry.

Turkey has a large refining capacity for vegetable oils. Major products of the vegetable oil industry are the oils of seeds, beans and oil-bearing fruits such as sunflower oil, corn oil, cottonseed oil, soybean oil, hazelnut oil and olive oil. Besides these products, margarine has an important place in the production and exports of the sector.

Products are exported mostly as refined and in retail packages. In Turkey, there are compulsory standards for exports of vegetable oils, so in all plants the production and exports conform to the standards of the Turkish Standards Institute, which are also consistent with international standards.

Sunflower oil is one of the most important products of the Turkish vegetable oil industry. It leads the sector with a share of 50% of the sales volume of vegetable oils in the domestic market. The export destinations of Turkey has varied from Middle and Far Eastern to various European and African countries.

As Turkish consumers like the taste of corn oil due to its aromatic components, the production and consumption of corn oil has increased over the last few years. The export of this item also showed a steady increase and reached important quantities among the exports of the edible oil sector.

Parallel to the growing demand in the world, Turkey has started to produce soybean oil, which is supplied to both domestic and foreign markets.

Among other vegetable oils, cottonseed oil, a by-product of processed cotton, is also produced in Turkey and it has many uses such as in the kitchen for cooking purposes and in the food industry for the production of margarine, shortening, salad dressings and commercially prepared fried foods. Rapeseed and peanut oils are other minor products of the vegetable oil industry in Turkey. Furthermore, the oil pressed from hazelnut is also regarded as good source of edible oil for cooking and gaining importance due to its health aspects as well as its light and unique flavour especially in salad dressings.

Olive Oil

Ancient Traditional Taste of Mediterranean Cuisine ...

Treasured since ancient times for their excellent nutritional quality, olives and olive oil have always been essential component of the diet in many Mediterranean civilizations, especially those located in Anatolia (Asiatic portion of Turkey). As a versatile ingredient, olive oil has been used not only as a flavor enhancer in various dishes, but also as a medicine for healing wounds, as fuel for lamps and as cosmetics for the hair and skin in different cultures. Considered sacred, it has been the symbol of peace and richness connecting three continents in one soul. Although the olive tree is native to the eastern Mediterranean basin, it gradually spread westwards beyond Turkey into Europe due to its increased importance as a source of edible oil.

Having the longest coastline on the Mediterranean Sea, Turkey has been one of the major producers of olives among Mediterranean countries. Thus, olive oil traditions and dishes have been the pride of Turkish cuisine since the time of the Ottomans. Likewise, table olives have been a staple at every Turkish breakfast, generally beside a slice of bread and traditional white cheese. Today, Turkey supplies the olives and olive oil of Mediterranean cuisine all over the world.

EDIBLE OILS AND FATS

A Healthy Food For All Ages

Olive oil is appreciated not only for their nutritional quality but also for their health benefits. Among edible oils, olive oil is the only one that can be produced by physical methods from a fresh fruit and can be consumed immediately after pressing the olive, like fruit juice. Likewise, a complex process, other than treatment with either dry salt or brine, is not required to produce table olives. Namely, olive oil and table olives are pure, natural, healthy products that require minimal processing. Today, olive oil is increasingly present on the food scene as the healthiest alternative to other edible oils. Some studies indicate that olive oil helps to reduce the levels of LDL (low-density lipoprotein), known as "bad cholesterol", due to its higher percentage of monounsaturated fatty acids content (oleic acid: 61-83%) than any other type of edible oil.

In addition to providing nutrients to the skin, this divine elixir protects and softens the face and body, maintaining a young, healthy and beautiful appearance.

Production

Olives grow best in warm temperatures, and cannot tolerate extreme climatic conditions. The Mediterranean region, owing to its mild climate, contains 98% of the olive harvest and 95% of the olive oil production in the world.

In Turkey, olive oil production has undergone remarkable developments since the eighties and more and more olive oil plants have either started to produce virgin olive oil or increased their production capacity. Table olives are produced in modern plants equipped with advanced technology, which enables them to comply with the standards of hygienic packaging. High quality production of table olives is done in retail packs such as cans, glass jars and/or vacuum packed bags. There are compulsory export standards for table olives and olive oil in Turkey. Thus, production in all plants conforms to the standards of the Turkish Standards Institute (TSE), which are also consistent with the international standards.

Being a net exporter of olive oil, Turkey supplies the variety of olive oil to a wide range of countries including major producer countries that either consume or re-export Turkish olive oil. Together with the EU countries, the USA is the major importer of olive oil in the world and Turkey is the most important supplier of these countries.

Turkish olive oil is demanded from every part of the world and there are more than hundred countries that have experienced the excellent taste and fragrance of Turkish olive oil such as Japan, South Korea, Canada, Switzerland and China as well as the Saudi Arabia, UAE, Philippines, Thailand, Ivory Coast, Seychelles, Colombia, Australia and so on. The shares of virgin and extra virgin olive oil exports have been increasing in total olive oil exports.

Although organic production still occupies a small proportion of the total area and output of olives, Turkey's organic olive and olive oil exports are also rising in parallel with the healthier consumption trends in the world.

HERBS AND SPICES

Owing to Turkey's climatic and ecological conditions many herbs and spices are cultivated or gathered from the natural vegetation just as in other parts of the world. Oregano, bay leaves, mahaleb, linden, sage, rosemary, licorice and juniper berries are gathered from nature. In addition, cumin, anise, red pepper, fenugreek, fennel and coriander are cultivated.

Modern processing plants have enabled Turkey to offer a wide range of quality and hygienic products to world markets. Natural drying, classification by hand and machine (depending on the type of production) and grinding (when required) are the general steps of processing in Turkey.

American Spice Trade Association (ASTA) Standards, which have international credibility, are applied to Turkish spice exports if requested.

According to the packaging requirements of importers, the packaging material, packaging, graphic design and quantity can be changed depending upon the characteristics of the product, the request of the purchaser and the transport mode of the product.

Also different climatic conditions throughout the country have been a significant contribution to the varieties raised. Today, in Turkey, around 500 types of herbs exist which grow naturally.

Turkish export companies apply the health and environmental considerations of customers and satisfy these customer needs by offering products which comply with both legislative and market requirements. Instruments such as ISO 9001:2000, ISO 22000, HACCP and GAP (Good Agricultural Practices) are positive arguments for quality, food safety and environmental consciousness.
